

HEADLONG FROM THE TRAIN.

AN ELEVATED RAILROAD GUARD FALLS TO THE SIDEWALK.

Francis A. Pennell, a guard on the Second avenue elevated railroad, fell from his train somehow just after it had passed the curve above the Chatham square station at 7:35 last night. He fell to the sidewalk and is dying in

What is a matter of conjecture. What is known was that seen by those persons who happened to be in Division street at the time, near where Eldridge street branches off from it.

Louis Lederer of 11 Division street was one of them. "A little after 7," he said, "I was going up to my store at 117 Division street. An elevated train was overhead going uptown. Just as it was nearly by I saw something big falling from it. I thought it was a bundle of rags. It fell in front of Neuschel's millinery store at 27 Division street. I saw it strike the sidewalk and then struck the sidewalk. Then I saw it was a man. He struck on the top of his head. His

He said he saw a gate swung open and let him out. Four policemen were on the scene in a few minutes. He told them he was alone and that one after another, but it was forty minutes before any one was answered. Finally an officer came and told him that the doctor was dead. The doctors found he had a broken skull and a broken back. There was no hope for him, they said.

Policeman Adam Raedig of the Eldridge police station, who was on duty at the time, took out a pocket and found there also a policy slip and a coupon entitling him heirs to $500 in case he died.

Fennell was not missed from his car until it got to Grand street. His place was between the car and the door. At that time he was who tried to board the train between those cars. He gave the police a complaint and was taken to the next and he let them then reported the matter to Conductor "Bronze" Brown of the Erie.

This leads to the only explanation which the trammen can think of to account for Pennell's disappearance. It is assumed that the driver of the cars can be reached from that side of the rear platform by opening the gate and leaning over. It is assumed the rules of the road to do this, but in doing so Pennell may have met his death in this way.

Pennell's wife has a fancy goods store at 1201 Broadway, and it is believed that some member of his family waited on the platsupper ready prepared for him. His train left South Ferry at 7:20 every night. His wife's cousin was waiting for him last night at the accustomed time. All the trainmen could tell her then was that he was missing.

part of January and early in February a large number of the adult employees of the mill became seriously ill.

Investigation showed that all of those who were sick had eaten freely of sausage, and that they were afflicted with trichinosis. The cause of the trouble was the fact that the victims had devoured. The others are still seriously ill, but no more deaths are expected.

Still Practising Polygamy.

DENVER, March 10.—Nicholas Grossbeck, a prominent Mormon, who was convicted once of polygamy, but was pardoned by the president of the United States, is still practicing on his home.

The other offender is his third wife, who is an extremely pretty woman of 30 years and who recently became a mother. This wife has confessed that the situation is intolerable for her and she has begged her husband to leave her in peace. Groesbeck is one of the wealthiest men in the territory, being reputed to be worth $500,000.

The Weather.

The severe storm that was coming eastward from the Lake Superior region spread out yesterday, but its severity was somewhat modified. The centre expanded, covering the country from Lake Michigan to over the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and the upper lakes, assuming the form of a "blizzard" on account of a driving snow and a cold wave. On the east of the centre the winds became high southeast, blowing from the north and northeast in the upper part of the storm. The storm extended from the Gulf of Mexico to the St. Lawrence, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and a few furies over this neighborhood. The fall was heaviest in Minnesota, measuring from a half foot to a foot and a half. In the middle Atlantic and lower New England States the advance of the storm was felt in light rain. The storm moved over the New England States, and the upper lakes south to the Gulf, and from Kansas eastward to the Alleghany Mountains. The coldest Clear weather prevailed over the Southern States and west of the Mississippi. It was warmer over Montana. Rain with a few flurries of snow began in this city at 10:30. Highest official temperature, 47°; lowest, 37°; average humidity, 74 percent; wind, southeast; average velocity 16 miles an hour; highest, 37 miles at 8 P. M.
